

The Space Between Us

This exhibition of Rachel's poems and Bridget's images is a collaboration between two sisters coming to terms with a brain tumour diagnosis.

Rachel and Bridget spent their childhood across two countries England and Aotearoa, New Zealand, before both eventually settling in Scotland. After Bridget travelled to Edinburgh for a Punx Picnic in 1986 she made the city her home and her younger sister Rachel followed a couple of years later.

The exhibition is an expression of their shock, grief and hope that followed Rachel's glioblastoma brain tumour diagnosis, which has a poor prognosis even with treatment.

Although this is an emotional and challenging topic, we also invite you to find connection, inspiration and even humour within the poetry and imagery. Indeed, dark humour has offered some of us our lightest moments.

As well as offering space to experience the work, we aim to raise awareness of the realities of brain tumours and fund raise for Brain Tumour Support, an organisation that plays an essential role in helping those diagnosed and their families to find connection, guidance, and care.
